Annex 12 : Description of the adaptation period

Service d'éducation et d'accueil pour jeunes enfants « Butzeschlass »

A well-planned adaptation phase is crucial to a child's future at the SEAJ. Children need time to adapt to their new environment and the people around them. During the adaptation phase, the legal representatives also learn about the day-to-day running of the SEAJ and get to know the staff who will be looking after their child from now on.

During the adaptation phase, it is important that the transition from the family to the SEAJ is planned carefully. The aim of the adaptation phase is to create a relationship of trust between everyone involved and to eliminate any fears. The adaptation phase is also an important process for the legal representatives. Legal representatives are considered to be the experts on their children, so they play an essential role in ensuring that the adaptation phase runs smoothly.

The adaptation phase lasts a minimum of 3 to 4 weeks and can be extended depending on the child's needs (age and situation). During the adaptation phase, the child attends the SEAJ on a daily basis. Ideally, the child is accompanied by the same person throughout the adaptation phase.

The adaptation phase is planned according to the child's rhythm.

The anamnesis: the intake

The educator contacts the child's legal representatives to arrange an appointment for an intake, which takes place approximately one week before the start of the adaptation phase. During this meeting, the child's preferences and habits are discussed and a questionnaire, known as an anamnesis, is jointly completed. The legal representatives are also given additional information about the SEAJ and the educational concept. If necessary, they can revisit the playroom and the cloakrooms. The various members of the team are also given the opportunity to introduce themselves to the legal representatives.

The first days together in the SEAJ

Throughout the first week, the child is accompanied by one of the two legal representatives. The legal representative is allocated a seat (chair or cushion) in the playroom. The educator prepares a play area for the child in advance and accompanies him/her during play. The legal representatives have the opportunity to observe their child in contact with the educator. The legal representatives do not intentionally draw the attention of their child or of others to themselves. If the child seeks comfort from the legal representative, he/she should not hesitate to do so. The legal representative does not force the child to separate from him or her; in fact, when the child is ready, he or she will return naturally to the group. For at least the first three days, the legal representative stays in the room with the child for one hour to accompany him/her. During the adaptation phase, it is recommended that the child brings an object that provides security and comfort (cuddly toy, dummy, etc.).

First steps towards separation

From the fourth day at the earliest, short separations are organised.

The time, the process and the duration of the separation are planned in advance with the educator.

It is important that the legal representative says goodbye to their child and that they do not leave the room discreetly. In addition, the separation can be facilitated if the legal representative leaves an object which belongs to them in the playroom.

During these first separations, the legal representative should remain in the SEAJ, for example in the parents' corner, so that they can return quickly to their child if needed.

The child goes alone to the crèche for a few hours

The number of hours the child attends the SEAJ is slowly increased to the number of hours he or she is expected to attend the SEAJ after the adaptation phase. Separation now takes place at the entrance of the group. Even when the child attends the SEAJ for a few hours, the legal representative is asked to remain in contact with and stays around the SEAJ.

The child adapts to the group, to the everyday routine of the SEAJ and to the educators.

The child is used to and visits the SEAJ at the request of the legal representatives.
